They uploaded their secret 'crush' live onto the internet, and during the current family night they were watching the live view of a meteor pass over their balcony once again, from exactly the same perspective. The comment on their video at the time was: We're watching the sky fall... from my web cam you can see the skywalk live!English is the official language of our state. It is the primary language of instruction in this state's public schools, and the language of communication in many facets of life in this state. It is the language that this member of the legal profession must speak to communicate to his or her clients, or provide to them written documents. It is the language that the citizens use in their everyday communications and business deals. It is the language that this member of the legal profession must use to represent his or her clients before tribunals, police and courts, and to provide testimony in trials before those bodies. The state adopted the state's first law on language in the Alaska Constitution of 1945. It was amended in 1956, but no other substantive amendments have been made to the law. Despite the lack of substantive amendments, the law has been amended repeatedly to clarify or further the law. Although some of the amendments were made by the Alaska Legislature, the amendments were submitted to the voters by initiative and do not alter the language of the law, but do clarify the law. The law does not define “English”, but rather states that the legislature may define the language if it chooses. There are four provisions in the law which give the legislature the authority to define the language: 1) after making an appointment to a judicial position, an appointee shall, within sixty days, receive a written communication in the English language; 2) judges shall receive written communications in the English language; 3) the legislature shall define the language of this state (which implicitly includes the law); and 4) the legislature may define the term “adulterated” to mean the addition of ingredients or the omission of ingredients.
