Q: What is a more idiomatic way to write this function in clojure (defn is-passed [f a] (f a)) (is-passed + 2 5) ;;=> (number? 2) (is-passed println 3) ;;=> (empty? 3) (is-passed {} 3) ;;=> (map? 3) This is my current solution to the question "Given a function that takes two arguments, how do I write a function that test if any one of those arguments is nil?" What is a more idiomatic way to do this (if possible)? A: One possibility is to use map: (defn is-passed [f a] (or (f a) (map? a))) A: As @jthill suggested in his answer, another way to write it is: (defn is-passed [f a] (or (f a) (map? a))) However, like Joost suggested in his comment, you should generally not use/set the variable name f. It's conventional to write the name of your argument variables as the first part of the name, like so: (defn is-passed [f v a] (or (f v) (map? a))) /*-----*\ ===== | \ / Field | OpenFOAM: The Open Source CFD Toolbox \ / O peration | Website: \ / A nd | Copyright (C) 2011-2018 OpenFOAM Foundation \ / M anipulation |

Characterization of the mannose-binding lectin gene family from different vertebrate species. Mannose-binding lectin (MBL) is a collagenous protein found in vertebrate serum. MBL is involved in the activation of complement and is believed to recognize microorganisms. A comparative analysis of the MBL1 gene sequences from different species reveals the existence of a mannose-binding lectin gene family. Mammalian and avian MBL genes share a 90% identity at the nucleotide level. In contrast, this identity is reduced to 70% in fish. In addition to the common exon-intron organization, the MBL genes also contain a cluster of highly conserved tandem repeats, which are responsible for the observed variation in gene size. Furthermore, the analysis of MBL sequences provides evidence for a duplication event of the ancestral MBL gene in fish and suggests a teleost-specific fusion of the ancestor and a duplication event that occurred in mammals. Q: Why does cloning a repository cause a .m2 folder to be created I am cloning a repository using git, and I am noticing something strange, that I do not expect. I am using Arch Linux and bazaar. I just noticed that when I clone a repository, the contents of the cloned folder look like this: . |——.bzr |——.bzrignore |——.bzr.log |——.bzrignore |——.bzr | |—— branches | | |—— XXX.YYY | | |—— XXX.YYY.branch | | |—— XXX.YYY.branch Why does this folder.m2 get added? I just created the repository. A: You can remove it by running bazaar cleanup command. If .m2 folders with java dependencies are added to the repo it's just because these folder don't depend on submodules in the .gitignore file.
