1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an LED driver circuit for use in, for example, a light source, and more specifically to an LED driver circuit with a quick boost function. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, LED illumination devices have been known in which a number of LEDs are connected in parallel to achieve a desired brightness. In such an LED illumination device, when power supply to the LED illumination device is stopped, all of the LEDs simultaneously stop lighting. In contrast, it is desirable to achieve a quick shutdown function that quickly ceases to light all of the LEDs at the same time when the power supply is stopped, with an aim to minimize the visibility of a lighting screen. In consideration of the foregoing, a conventional LED driver circuit includes a power switch for supplying power from a power supply to an LED, a temperature sensor for detecting the temperature of an LED drive circuit, a temperature detection circuit for comparing a detected temperature of the LED drive circuit with a previously set reference temperature, and a control circuit for, when the detected temperature is higher than the reference temperature, initiating a quick boost to increase a boost voltage supplied to the power switch to quickly turn on the power switch. However, since the power switch is used to supply power to the LED, the power switch may not be turned on and off quickly. In other words, due to the quick boost function, a total time period from a start of the quick boost to a time at which all the LEDs stop lighting depends on the time constant of the temperature sensor and the boost voltage. As such, an LED illumination device using a conventional LED driver circuit having the quick boost function exhibits a reduced time from the start of the quick boost to when all the LEDs stop lighting.

Q: Does a transpose of a square array is a square array in python? I'm trying to implement a transpose function of the array. For example, L = [[1, 2], [3, 4]] print L 1 2 3 4 [1, 2] [3, 4] w = L[1] print w 1 3 [1] [3] However, it works fine with the below code. def transpose(L): w = [] for i in L: w.append(i

What's New In?

Student section of a Bollywood show. Photograph: Sajjad Shahabadi Mumbai's ethnically diverse audience may have never seen a Bollywood show quite like this, but that doesn't mean they will always be surprised. Out of the shadows comes a student section of a Bollywood show, for a Chardi Kala class – a theatre group on the B.T. Road campus of the University of Mumbai. With a live soundtrack from a mobile telephone, the show is the brainchild of Adi Shankar, the 30-year-old son of director Subhash, who teaches drama at the university. Sitting on a stoep at the university's theatre, he tells me the show is one of four they will be performing next month. "We chose the location because it is a beautiful setting, but because it is a traditional way of showing traditional Bollywood music and dance, we chose the university campus for the production," Adi says. The class is one of four dedicated to Bollywood that Adi has taught since he started six years ago. "The city has been in the thick of Bollywood culture for a while now. Some of us have been living in a bubble for long, but others have been active in the culture," he says, also offering advice to newcomers to the city. "Mumbai is a melting pot. If you are curious about people from different backgrounds, you should check out the university campus during the day, because everyone is out and about. If you have kids, keep them close to you." Raj Rangachary's acting students. Photograph: Sajjad Shahabadi After the show, the students gather to talk about Bollywood – but they are more interested in talking about life. One student, who goes by the name Raj Rangachary, talks about how he grew up in Mumbai's Nerul. "I had an after-school job with a bottle company, but I wanted to be an actor so I quit and joined the college. I'm planning to graduate in two years' time. "I love Bollywood, though I am not that much into singing or dancing. I would like to do acting, singing and dancing. "My experience in Bollywood has helped me a lot. I am thankful to Subhash's father, T. L. Vinayakan, for giving
