Ion migration in dense solvation shells: Comparison of nanoconfined ionic liquids and confined polyelectrolytes with sharp-cut-off water-mediated interactions. Ion migration in nanoconfined environments is of tremendous importance for ionic liquids (ILs) and the development of IL-based actuators. In this work, we use molecular dynamics (MD) simulations to study the salt self-diffusion and water (guest) incorporation in the nonpolar core of the ILs, [BMIM][PF(6)], [BMIM][TFSI] and [BMIM][Tf(2)N] confined in various substrates of different hydrophilicity. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first study of self-diffusion of ILs inside nanoconfined material. Our findings demonstrate that confinement leads to a significantly lower self-diffusion rate compared to the bulk. With increasing hydrophilicness of the substrate, an increasingly larger hydration shell is formed around the ions; for [BMIM][PF(6)], [BMIM][TFSI], and [BMIM][Tf(2)N], this leads to the formation of intermolecular sharp-cut-off water-mediated interactions. In both the ILs and polyelectrolytes (PEs), we find an increase of the self-diffusion rate with increasing ion size and charge. This, however, is not the case for small guest molecules such as
